Getting Personal with Data!

Our mission is to teach students to think critically, solve real-world challenges, and take ownership of their learning. We have reached the time of the year where we challenge our students to self-reflect by creating a digital portfolio. Self-reflection is a tool that is used in the military, college, workforce, and in making daily life decisions.

At Charles R. Drew Middle School, we are using data analysis to promote growth and ownership through self-reflection. On April 23rd, students will participate in a “Student Led” conference. Students must collect and be able to present their own personal data on attendance, academic performance, behavior, and iReady growth to their audience using their Chromebook. Students will also be required to showcase evidence of learning. Students will be rewarded with an incentive for having an adult representative attend their presentation.
